Galloway Township, NJ - The Richard Stockton College has opened a new Art Gallery with inaugural exhibitions "New Works by David Ahlsted: Recent Paintings" from January 17 through February 17 of the College's academic year-long celebration

100th Anniversary of Teaching.

While the work of Ahlsted, a former faculty member and current visual arts faculty Marilyn Brent, Alfonso Corpus, Frank Kallop, Michael McGarvey, Jedediah Morfit, Hannah Ueno and Wendel White will provide striking opening exhibitions, the new Art Gallery itself will be a star of the show.

"This new facility is comparable the very best galleries one would see in New York or San Francisco," Stockton President Herman J. Saatkamp said. "It is a superb venue to display the works of talented artists."

Located adjacent to the Performing Arts Center in L-Wing of the campus here, the gallery has two levels. The lower gallery contains approximately 2,250 square feet with 183 feet of wall space. The upper gallery features a floor cutout overlooking the lower gallery and also is approximately 2,250 square feet with 163 feet of wall space.

The lower gallery will show the visual arts faculty exhibition. In the upper gallery, Ahlsted's solo exhibition features a selection of painted studies for his commissioned murals in the new Campus Center. Ahlsted's four murals, New Jersey Pine Barrens: Spring, Summer, Fall Winter were permanently installed in the Campus Center Grand Hall last year and may be viewed there during regular Campus Center hours.
